ABOUT KEN JEONG

Actor, producer and writer Ken Jeong has established himself as one of today’s top comedic stars. Jeong’s career path started off on a different course. He earned his undergraduate degree at Duke University, got his medical degree at the University of North Carolina, and completed his Internal Medicine residency in New Orleans all the while developing his comedy. In 1995, Jeong won the Big Easy Laff Off competition and headed to Los Angeles, where he began performing regularly and was seen on several television shows including “The Office,” “Entourage” and “Curb Your Enthusiasm.” Since his feature film debut playing the doctor in “Knocked Up” in 2007, Jeong has appeared in “Role Models,” “Pineapple Express,” “Step Brothers,” “The Hangover,” “The Hangover Part II” and “Crazy Rich Asians.” “The Hangover” earned Jeong an MTV Movie Award in 2010 and was the highest-grossing R-rated comedy to date, with more than $467 million worldwide, only to be trumped by “The Hangover II,” which grossed $581 million worldwide. Jeong dedicates his spare time to volunteering with Stand Up To Cancer, which is a cause very dear to his heart. For more information, visit drken.net.
